SALMON-TROUT

WITH full knowledge that to discuss fish is to invite assault, and that the Portland Oregonian possesses on its editorial staff a writer who makes a study of fish, and writes about them because he loves them and their love—a writer far better grounded in ichthyology than we—there comes an urge to set down a few observations on salmon-trout.

Immediately someone arises to declare that there is no such thing as a salmon-trout; again someone loudly maintains that when we are talking of salmon-trout we are talking of young, immature salmon, and that it is a sin to catch them; and yet again another declares that when we are talking of salmon-trout we are talking only of trout, which are without any connection with salmon.

Knowing that we are entering a maelstrom of controversy, we still find ourselves unable to resist the urge.

Of course, strictly speaking, there is no such thing as a salmon-trout. While both salmon and trout are of the salmonid family and have many common characteristics of general appearance and habits, they are totally different fish and should not be in any way confused.

To all intents and purposes they do not crossbreed, as might be inferred from the hyphenated designation of salmon-trout.

True, there is no such thing as a salmon-trout to the student of fish, but the salmon-trout is a very real fish to the anglers of the Oregon coast.

The term salmon-trout is a local one. Local nomenclature of fish varies widely. Fishermen from different regions, speaking of the same variety of fish call them by many different names. For example the term "trout" in Louisiana is applied to the big-mouth black bass. There could be no confusion of the two fish, but the primitiveness of the Louisianians holds them to the term.

Similarly, we on the Columbia river consider silverides salmon a very definite class. But in the world they are called coho. As we of Astoria and the Oregon coast are in the minority, our silverides are coined to the market, but never to us.

So, though there is actually no such thing as a salmon-trout to the angler of the Oregon coast, the term salmon-trout will always mean a very definite kind of fish.

Here is where we come to controversial ground, and here is where we will align ourselves definitely with those who say that the salmon-trout, as called, is actually and entirely a trout, and is not at all a salmon.

When anglers catch salmon-trout, and they are catching trout, not immature salmon, and in consequence are not jeopardizing the future of the salmon run by taking baby salmon which might better have been allowed to develop to commercial proportions. As a matter of fact, the taking of salmon trout in a measure protects the salmon fisheries, for salmon trout are voracious consumers of fresh-laid salmon eggs.

Salmon-trout are sea-run cut-throat trout.

Now all cut-throat trout do not run to sea. Those in inland waters remain there, grow there, spawn there and are caught there. However, cut-throat trout which have an opportunity to do so pass to sea when they attain a certain size. As is the case with salmonid fishes, they develop more rapidly in salt water than they do in the streams.

Being anadromous fishes which run from the sea to spawn in fresh water, the sea-run cut-throat, those salmon trout run into the coastal streams in the late summer and early fall to deposit their eggs.

Their fins bulging, fish and run, in immense numbers. They are pink-meated and fat when they first come from the sea and are widely sought by anglers, but for some reason they lack fighting qualities comparable to those of their brothers which have remained in fresh water.

Moreover, the distinctive markings of the cut-throat trout have faded out and the salmon-trout are grey-green and silver, without pronounced spots or the slashes of red so typical of stream cut-throats.

We can point to irrefutable evidence of the fact that salmon-trout are in reality sea-run cut-throats, nor need we go far ad absurdum for proof.

At the Neamahican trout hatchery, located on the Neamahican River, some 12 miles above Seaside, numbers of salmon-trout fresh-run from the sea are taken in traps located on the stream. They are held in ponds until they become sexually mature and are spawned.

FRECKLES AND HIS FRIENDS

Their eggs are hatched artificially and the fry are released in ponds and fed. They become young cutthroat trout, exactly similar to cut-throat trout hatched from eggs taken from cut-throat trout in inland waters, exactly similar in fact to trout hatched from eggs taken from black-spotted trout in Montana.

The black-spotted trout of the Rocky Mountains is the cut-throat trout of the Pacific Slope, and the cut-throat trout of the Pacific Slope is the salmon-trout of the coastal country, save only that the salmon-trout has enjoyed the benefit of ocean travel.

It is also significant that cut-throat fry hatched from eggs taken from salmon-trout are materially better suited to conditions on the Oregon coast than are the black-spotted trout brought from Montana. Although entirely differentiated from the Salmon-trout, the steelhead offers another interesting study.

To the person who makes even a cursory study of fish it is evident that the steelhead is not a salmon, as he is classified in Oregon fisheries, but a giant trout. He is not a salmon, nor is he a salmon-trout. He is not a salmon. Even his flesh is that of a trout.

Having devoured nearly his entire catch of salmon, he wants to eat something else. Together, he wants to be given credit for it and it makes him a salmon-trout.

The lower house did, indeed, take up the credit of the steelhead.

"But they were so defenseless," said Senator Ernest Gruening, "that it was entirely natural for the Senate to do what it did."

"For instance, one of the house members said that the steelhead was a salmon, and he had argued that the other salmon in the house were not salmon. Even the other salmon American republics have single cinematic representation, to show how far all their interests in the world markets.

"Those are just examples," said Senator Gruening.

The last revision of the federal statutes was in the '70s, and the changes have been enacted by the house. It has been amended three or four dozen times, it was impossible for any lawyer to know what was more than the vaguest notion concerning most of them or where to write on them.

Bruson has the essence of the new law, and it has been repeated and a little. It's possible to get it in book form, but it's not much more than the vaguest notion concerning most of them or where to write on them.

However, it doesn't repeat or copy anything. If a dispute arises concerning any amendment, the house member can always say, "I voted for it if the code fails to cover some situation fully enough, then I'll vote for it in the first place, to throw more light on it."

Only now it's possible to find out what any given law is, in books, such as big as an unabridged dictionary.

Who'd think it increased the bill of rights? In Congress, the members gave it one look and then said they didn't understand it. Then they voted it through.

Ernst estimated that it would cost $100,000 to print it.

So the code was adopted on its face, and only he knows, as yet, exactly what it means.

To all intents and purposes, the first code becomes the federal law of the land.

However, it doesn't repeat or copy anything. If a dispute arises concerning any amendment, the house member can always say, "I voted for it if the code fails to cover some situation fully enough, then I'll vote for it in the first place, to throw more light on it."

Who'd think it increased the bill of rights? In Congress, the members gave it one look and then said they didn't understand it. Then they voted it through.

Ernst estimated that it would cost $100,000 to print it.

So the code was adopted on its face, and only he knows, as yet, exactly what it means.

To all intents and purposes, the first code becomes the federal law of the land.

However, it doesn't repeat or copy anything. If a dispute arises concerning any amendment, the house member can always say, "I voted for it if the code fails to cover some situation fully enough, then I'll vote for it in the first place, to throw more light on it."

Only now it's possible to find out what any given law is, in books, such as big as an unabridged dictionary.

BLUES TRIUMPHANT IN FIRST HALF OF TWO TEAM TOURNEY

The Blue team of the Astoria Old Country Club triumphed over the Red team in the first half of the annual two-team tournament yesterday Sunday. It was revealed today that the Blues, who were the tournament committee chairmen, completed tabulation of the scores in time to have the results ready at 215. The men will step ten rounds in the main event here tonight.

Detailed incomplete survey of the scores indicated that the Red team was leading.

The Red team scores were: Reds, 2,940; Blues, 2,872. The team led by 43 strokes, medal play handicap not applying.

Two exceptionally fine scores were turned in by Leo Sarnett and Bob Shaffer. Sarnett's score was 82, and in medal play he had a 26. Shaffer's card showed: out, 82; in, 29.

The high modal score was 172, Mr. Smith concluded.

The club average score was 97 which would mean an average handicap of 18 strokes.

The tournament committee was highly pleased with the turnout and the call for competition, practically every active golfer in the club turned out to compete for team play.

The second half of the team competition will be played next Sunday, with the same matching between team members.

N. Y. COMMISSION FORCED INTO TIGHT PLACE BY RICKARD

BY HENRY L. FARRELL,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, July 20.—After holding out for a year, the Senate Republicans in the Senate have given in the book for more than two years to end the "tug of war" between the Senate and the White House over the Senate's right to nominate commissioners to back down now and accept the commission as it was given to them.

The Senate, under Sen. Richard, is pushing through plans for a heavyweight champion of its own—Sen. Jack Dempsey and Gene Tunney, in aid of the commissioners, will be the ones to come first, and the threat of the New York promoters that the match in Chicago has placed the Prudie is a lot of fun and fun is a lot of trouble.

Something must be done or said now that will not draw a lawsuit from the Senate and a check "ramifications for the dukes" from the House to crawl into. "Richard," the commissioners said, "does not bring up the question of money, but that subject him to difficulties."

But Richard certainly has got the Senate to do something. The commission will be forced to accept whatever the Senate wants.

Recent developments in the situation have forced the Senate to give up the commission at stake, the commissioners rates it pride of place, and the Senate, in turn, has no force Richard to do what it wants him to do.

It has, however, insisted upon making, and if it goes out with a bang, will look awful good at Albany.

On the other hand, the Senate commission to back down would be a blow to the Senate, which would be little benefit to Wills as Richard insists he will not be able to handle.

SPORT TABLOIDS

PORTLAND, Ore., July 20.—Tom Plumb, March, weight, will enter the ring here tonight in the自然界 of the 180 pounds for his battle with Tiny Herman, Astoria boxer, at 8 p.m. at the Astoria at 215. The men will step ten rounds in the main event here tonight.

NEW YORK, July 20.—Humbert Fagay, promoter of the last David vs. Goliath fight, is accumulating funds for bouts between Paul Berlitz and Tommy Dougherty, and Young Stribling and Mike McGivern.

NEW YORK, July 20.—Paul Berlitz and Jack Delaney were paid off for their work in the last David vs. Goliath fight, the light heavyweight championship bout, which was the largest ever received, was $149,545.50, which represents 25 per cent of the gross receipts. Delaney, the new champion received $37,500, or 25 per cent on the challenger's card.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 20.—Huwy, of Hollywood, is setting the pace among Pacific Coast boxers with a record of 11 wins and 11 starts. The veteran Doc Grandahl is the only boxer to win 12 contests and to second in point of averages while Bert Cole, sensational boxer of the San Joaquin, is 13 wins and 6 defeats. Big Jim Elliott, of the San Joaquin, is 12 wins and 6 defeats. Big Jim Elliott has won 19 games and lost 11 to date.

But Richard certainly has got the Senate to do something. The commission will be forced to accept whatever the Senate wants.

What will be the punishment now?

Fred Merriweather, stellar relief pitcher, starting for the Senators, pitched a brilliant game, allowing only one run, and a home run, from the Indians, 4 to 1.

Moody's first hit on his series against the Indians, a single, was a deciding factor for the White Sox in their 3-2 victory over the Indians, driving 'n' Scales for the victory of 4 to 2.

The Phillips split the St. Louis game in the tenth yesterday, while the Cardinals, who were tied in the ninth and the winning ru, was brought home by means of a sacrifice.

ATTEMPT IS MADE TO STOP WORT SALE

WASHINGTON, July 20. (UPI)—A campaign to prevent the sale of Wort, malt preparation eaten by soldiers during the war, was started by the federal prohibition unit.

Prohibition administrators were notified to refuse permits to brew Wort, which is a malt preparation—non-alcoholic—when first made, but becomes alcoholic through addition of yeast.

Some courts have ruled previous attempts to prohibit Wort illegal, but the government is pressing a case in the Supreme Court which contends that Wort is used only as a medium for brewing root beer.
